Partnership and Change for School Development

John Chi-kin Lee, Leslie Nai-kwai Lo & Allan Walker

Introduction

School restructuring is very much on everyone's agenda in the new millennium. There is a growing movement for schools to become involved in partnerships with key players in the educational system to enhance the quality of school education and make them maximally relevant in the 21st century. There is also a call for national decisions to reflect on purposes of schooling such as "to learn to know, to learn to do, to learn to live together, to learn to be" (Hughes, 1999, p. 27) which have implications for curriculum,

But Google ≠ Everything

- There is no free lunch. Google is great but it doesn't own the Web – in particular the research materials and contents that it indexes;
- The Library already paid for a lot of e-journals, e-books, e-newspapers so that you can access free online
- And remember, still not everything is in electronic format or online
- So, if you only rely on Google, you are going to miss a lot.

Why You Can't Trust Everything You Found on the Internet

- Evaluation Criteria:
 - Who created it? Are they trustworthy? Are they who they say they are? Is it a personal web page or an organizational web page?
 - When was it created and updated? Click on the related links – how many dead links are there?
 - What are the target audience? Are there advertising on it?
 - What is the tone and design of it?
 - Are the contents objective? Who sponsored it?
 - Something just doesn't add up? Too good to be true?
